Example1

I partly, if not completely, agree with the underlined statement. While it is nearly impossible to precisely measure and compare all the environmental and aptitude factors among learners, it is often observed in typical foreign language classes that some students learn better and more quickly than others. This suggests that there are limitations to what classroom teachers can achieve in terms of facilitating students' learning experiences. (66 words)

Example2

I strongly disagree with the underlined statement, believing that teachers can inspire students to learn a foreign language. For example, when I was in high school, I encountered an English teacher who served as my role model. Well-travelled and having studied abroad in the United States, he showed me how English proficiency would lead me to broaden my horizons and worldviews. (61 words)

問題4の解答欄

Example1

I would choose "A more flexible schedule" and "More staff for my team or department" as two effective factors. Frontline workers typically operate on fixed shifts, leaving them little flexibility in determining their work hours and time off, especially for those with families. A more flexible schedule would help reduce their stress, enabling them to achieve a better work-life balance. However, dealing with the chronic shortage of workers is crucial to achieving this. With an adequate number of staff members, tasks can be shared more efficiently, which helps relieve workload pressure. This, in turn, would significantly improve workers' quality of life. Example2

One factor may be better health benefits, including a discounted gym membership. In fact, exercising can help frontline workers, or any professionals for that matter, relieve their stress. Given that many of them work irregular schedules, having access to a gym open 24 hours a day would be beneficial. Another aspect that can play an effective role in reducing stress, especially for those with small children, is the affordability of childcare services. It is not fair that a large portion of their earnings made through their hard work goes to childcare costs, which undoubtedly contributes to stress. (97 words)
