Brazil needs to address the issue of increasing temperatures more urgently than any of the other ten countries. In fact, while the South American nation will see its temperature increase by as much as 4.3 degrees by the end of this century, access to air conditioning (AC) is no more than 50 percent as of 2025. Another country that will be strongly affected by rising temperatures is France, where less than one quarter of the population had access to AC last year. Given that its temperature is projected to rise by 3.7 degrees, AC will likely be a necessity to survive hot summers in France by 2100. [107 words]
